In Praise of Men explores the beauty, power and eroticism of men, seen through another mans eyes. It is about men who inhabit different niches of the sexual spectrum finding each other and, despite their fears and concerns, learning to enjoy each others company. In The Need a straight man tries to resist the pull of returning to the scene of the crime; of returning to the place where he gave up his body to another man. He has no idea what is causing him to act this way, and tries to talk himself out of going to visit Andy again, but it is a losing battle. Having made the journey will he be able to resist, or will he give in to the thing – the madness within him, as he sees it - once again? In World Cup Wangers Stig travels to Brazil with three gay guys. He has always been curious but, apart from a drunken request to a friend for a kiss, has managed to keep these homo-erotic thoughts in check. Now in the exotic location of Sao Paulo, and in the warmth and glorious sunshine, Stig starts to feel sexy and adventurous. One night, when the four friends are in a hotel room, making plans for the football matches they will attend, Lars and Hans starting making out. Despite his shock and embarrassment, Stig is incredibly turned on and when Jens comes on to him he has to ask himself how far he is prepared to go to satisfy his curiosity. In Lusty Love in the Afternoon Danny is kicking his heels in his local shopping mall when he sees the beefy blonde of his dreams. Luke is casually bisexual and to Dannys amazement they are soon making love. Time moves on and Luke advises Danny that he has met a girl and has started dating. Danny decides to put the past behind him and finds a boyfriend. And then, one night, the two couples find themselves in the same restaurant and Luke realizes that he is extremely jealous. Things dont go too well for two of the diners, but the other two end the evening on a high note. In The Perfect Prefect Gerard -my most favourite of all the characters I have ever created – develops a soft spot for a gay guy. Their friendship is tender, sweet and fraught with frustration as Gerard is only available on loan. He has made it clear that he wants to marry and settle down at some point. Despite this, he has made it clear, too, that he will always want to see his little buddy, and take care of his needs from time to time. The little guy has to deal with balancing Gerards delicious lovemaking against the heartache he always leaves behind as he sets out trying to make a life for himself with someone new.
