

Maggies Farm

I can anticipate no greater calamity for the country than a dissolution of the Union...Still, a Union that can only be maintained by swords and bayonets, and in which strife and civil war are to take the place of brotherly love and kindness, has no charm for me. I shall mourn for my country and for the welfare and progress of mankind. If the Union is dissolved and the Government disrupted, I shall return to my native State and share the miseries of my people, and, save in defense will draw my sword on none.-Robert E. Lee; January 23, 1861

In 1850 the thought of a Civil War between the States of the Union was thought to be untenable and nigh impossible. Little did Americans realize that fifteen years later 600,000 of their countrymen would lie dead in battlefields here at home. That was over a century and a half ago. Again, Americans today in 2012 cannot conceive of what should happen if factionalism, sectionalism, and secessionism should take root once more. But just like our forebears, we cannot foresee the impending disaster until it is too late. Jonah Maggie is one such American, he lives a normal and happy life with his wife and children before he is caught up in a conflict that he neither started nor can stop. But he, and many of his fellow countrymen, feel compelled to take up arms for a cause they believe in against an enemy that can but only triumph.
