

Varied Images the Stories of Paul F. Wolf

This book is a collection of forty-six short stories that the author, Mr. Paul F. Wolf, published over a twenty-five year period. Many of them are set in Chicago, his own hometown. But others are set in different locations, usually places the author has visited or spent time exploring. But the stories are really about people, however, and the conditions they survive in, the circumstances they are involved with, the way they cope and deal with getting through their days. Many of Mr. Wolf's characters are in trouble, either through their own fault, or perhaps through what one might call, chance circumstance. Some of the stories imply a deep sympathy with the poor and the American underclass; they try to bring light and empathy to the problems that exist in these corners and alleys of our culture. Other characters have money and the better things in life, but all of them have this in common: they have to cut and cope their way through what Fate has thrown in front of them. Mr. Wolf has tried not only to entertain, but also to bring forth in each story some insight or perspective of his own to the situation. Without moralizing, he hopes he has succeeded in making a few observations, and shedding a little light.
